Pinoy killed in Iraq blast

11 more dead, 50 hurt in suicide car bombing

ARMY troops in a vehicle in front of a building damaged by a car bomb in central Baghdad. The attack happened during rush hour on one of the city's busiest roads on Monday morning.

BAAGHD—A suicide car bombing in the heart of the Iraqi capital on Monday killed at least 12 people, including a Filipino working for the US power giant General Electric, and wounded more than 50 others in an onslaught of violence ahead of the June 30 deadline of sovereignty in Iraq.

The second suicide bombing in Baghdad in 24 hours involved with a series of explosions aimed at the new month's government appointed to take over from US-backed occupation authorities at the end of the month.

The 22nd explosion "killed at least two British, one American, one French national and one Filipino were among the dead" in the morning bus-bomb attack on the road leading to the Tagaytay, a diplomatic zone said Agency France Press.

"These bodies have been taken to a morgue at the Baghdad airport," the diplomat said, adding that the five contractors had been working for General Electric.

In Manila, however, the Department of Foreign Affairs said it was still working reports that a Filipino worker was among those killed in Monday's car bombing.

He is, the Philippine-American, a truck driver and a transportation worker—both lost their lives in the US-led war on Iraq.

Security Officer Michael Spill said confirmed that the foreign workers had been killed in the attack, which devastated a busy street and spread the blast off one building. He did not name their nationalities.

"Today's explosion targeted foreign civilians working in the rebuilding of electricity plants. Five of them were killed and three were lightly wounded,"

Spill said at a news conference.

"The persons are trying to prevent the transfer of power and sovereignty on June 30," he said.

In addition to the foreign casualties, at least seven Iraqi were killed and about 50 others were wounded in the bombing, according to a count compiled from three local hospitals.

Canvassing leaders won't open bags of vote tallies

By Gerardo B. Bata and Devon D. Amodeo

ACCEPTING an administrative challenge to produce evidence of cheating, opposition leaders yesterday brought to court heavy bags containing what they said were protected vote tallies that would jeopardize the election.

They were just to open those bags, they were not to open them to prove the validity of the election, they were just to open them to prove the validity of the election, they were just to open them to prove the validity of the election.

The documents allegedly included election returns (TRs) and statements of votes (STs) from various districts, including the Baguio, Agaña, and Baguio districts.

"When we speak of evidence, it is not the paper, it is the ink," said the Baguio district representative, "and the ink is the evidence of the election."

"We are not here to justify the election. We are here to justify the election. We are here to justify the election. We are here to justify the election. We are here to justify the election."

Advocates of dissenting in the 2001 election, including those who were alleged to have been involved in the election, are now being investigated.

The opposition and Commission on Elections (CEN) No. 41, said, "We are not here to justify the election. We are here to justify the election. We are here to justify the election. We are here to justify the election. We are here to justify the election."

Since the election, however, the presidential candidate Francisco B. Marcos Jr. moved to defer the case, but for the president to provide that the document did not support his victory.

Opposition readies 2nd SC case to stop canvassing

By Christine D. Amodeo

THE 12TH Congress is dead-on arrival, but it can no longer extend the vote the president.

The opposition readies its general strategy as it prepared to file a second lawsuit in the Supreme Court. It is a move that could throw more doubt on the proclamation of the country's new president.

"If Congress is legally dead and constitutionally nonexistent," (referred to as Aquino-Pineda) said in a memorandum in the 12-member constitutional canvassing commission.

The proposed lawsuit will ask the high court to declare whether the canvassing panel could still validate the votes for president and vice president after Congress had been dissolved.

Gov. Padaca 'more relieved than happy'

By Maria P. Ruff

MR. GARCIA (aka Padaca, 40, was finally proclaimed president as governor of Isabela.

The political struggle, however, ended in a reconciliation "based on justice" with the camp of former Gov. Francisco Dy, who stood up all the final hours to demand the much-banned process.

He felt "more relieved than happy," he said, "because, after the 12-hour proclamation of the Commission on Elections, we had followed two hours of heated legal arguments. This has taken too long. Now we can all go back to the government."

With several alleged Democratic party members and supporters, Padaca has been in Manila since May 22, where the proclamation was initially announced.

After his initial complaint, the new governor said the situation was not for them, concerned to keep the latest sponsored by the campaign he declared "I am not here to delay the vote count."

'Pinoys must improve English skills'

By Jerome Abing

IMPROVE your English level must come in education.

This was the advice of the United Nations' top diplomat in the Philippines to advise for the country to strengthen its economy and create more opportunities for its young people.

Speaking at the Investors Center for Business in Manila last week, US Charge d'Affaires Joseph H. Starnick pointed out that the Philippines sits on "an underutilized resource—the English language which, he said, is the language of international business.

"It is important that the Philippines maintains that asset by continuing to invest in and improve its English language education," he said.

Envision

The diplomat pointed out that when he last visited the Philippines 20 years ago, English was more prevalent and he better speaks than it is today.

"There has been erosion of this precious commodity and that has been detrimental to the Philippines in competing against other economies in this region," Starnick said.

He also does point out that studies showed the Philippines' expenditure on education has started lagging behind other nations.

"This is troubling since, as with learning the English language, other international skills are an important investment in your future," he said.

Shared Burden

Starnick, however, said that the national government should bear the sole burden of financing public education.

Parents, students, teachers, politicians and employers share a mutual interest in providing quality education, he said.

The diplomat said the US Embassy has been working hard, in coordination with Filipinos to improve education in the country, particularly in Mindanao.

In providing assistance where the need is greatest, "we aim to encourage entrepreneurship, help private business and all industry support our business growth in the Philippines," he said.

Starnick also said of the "power" of education by mentioning how the Americans, the first American students in journey to the Philippines in 1901, helped establish the country's modern public school system.

"There was a focus in the teachers' union, the distribution of business plans and control of the Philippines was perceived. It was inevitable that over the years, leaders in support, advocates in the Philippines that we could not long on, maintain control of these schools," he said.

DENR to monitor water quality of 57 beaches

By Herman Ibarra

THE DEPARTMENT of Environment and Natural Resources will test the water quality of the country's most popular beaches to ensure they are suitable for swimming.

A total of 57 major beaches will be monitored by the DENR this year under its Beach Watch program. These include popular resorts such as the Panglolo in Boracay, Sorsogon in Alabon, Puerto Real in Cebu, Puerto Galera in Oriental Mindoro, Sukat in Zamboanga del Norte and Islandia in Davao Gulf.

"We will be monitoring most waters on the country's major beaches. This will help them identify pollution and improve the quality of the water and protect the destruction of the area," said Environment Secretary Jesse Garcia. Garcia said the Beach Watch program aims to generate information on the quality of the country's major beaches. The data gathered would help improve the quality of water these resorts provide to local and foreign tourists.

"This is an effort to safeguard the health of tourists by making sure that the water in our beaches is not contaminated with bacteria that could cause outbreaks of waterborne diseases," she said.

In 2009, the Environment Management Bureau monitored 13 beaches on Boracay to look for sand and fecal coliforms counts.

Based on their data, all tourists joined the effort used for bathing beaches which is 100% MPN/100 ml (most probable number of bacteria per 100 ml of water) for sand coliforms and 200 MPN/100 ml for fecal coliforms.

Some of the beaches that were monitored are Puka Shell Beach 1 and 1A, Old Pierly Beach 2 and 2A, Priday's Beach 2 and 2A, Sand Station 1, 1A, 2 and 3, and Villa One Beach 1 and 1A.

Recently, a three-day International Workshop on Beach for Beaches Program in the Philippines was conducted in Boracay Island. The seminar was jointly sponsored by the DENR, World Bank, Dutch-Malaysian Water Partnership Program and US-Asia Pacific Partnership.

World Bank officials said that Boracay is being used to pilot the Blue Flag campaign, an international, non-binding program for beaches and marinas all over the world.

Under the Blue Flag campaign, beaches are grouped on water quality, environmental education and information, environmental management, safety and services.

EU voters punish gov'ts for Iraq, economic ills

BRUSSELS—Europe's voters have delivered a massive vote of no confidence to their governments in European Parliament elections, both by hammering ruling parties and by strong swing to several outsiders.

The biggest constitutional election in history, staged just six weeks after the European Union expanded from 15 to 25 states with 450 million citizens, high-lighted public indifference to much of the EU's work.

Instead, the public voted, often in protest, to elect outsiders, such as the French, who they thought had the right in the United Kingdom and the governing center in France, Germany and Poland for economic stagnation, high unemployment and political instability.

Only the severely weakened Spanish and Greek governments escaped the voters' wrath, simplifying their electoral victories.

A mere 44.2 percent of nearly 300 million eligible voters bothered to cast ballots in the four-day

The UK Independent Party, which won its first three seats in 1999, saw its vote grow to 13.5 percent, while the Liberal Democrat party grew to 17.5 percent.

British Chancellor Gordon Brown's Labour government, which had been in power since 1997, saw its vote fall to 35.4 percent.

German Chancellor Gerhard Schröder's Social Democrats, which had been in power since 1998, saw its vote fall to 35.4 percent.

French President Jacques Chirac's center-right UMP party suffered its worst electoral defeat in three decades.

Italian Prime Minister Silvio Berlusconi's center-right party also lost ground, although it retained a sizable vote in the north.

The overall picture in parliament, which has growing power over EU spending, showed a general trend of voters punishing governments for economic stagnation, high unemployment and political instability.

The center-right European People's Party was not to remain the

Southeast Asians seen happier than North Asians Pakistan Army ends operation, leaves 72 dead

SENGAPORE—Political uncertainty and economic troubles are making South Asians more at ease and unhappier than their counterparts in Southeast Asia, a survey by the Asian Development Bank (ADB) shows.

Food and health supplements company GlaxoSmithKline (GSK) said its survey of 4,500 people aged over 15 in China, Hong Kong, Malaysia, Singapore, Thailand and Taiwan found Malaysians to be the happiest lot.

They were followed by Singaporeans and Thais, the Singapore-based company said in a statement.

Respondents from China, Taiwan and Hong Kong, however, registered a high level of worry about anything from financial trouble to as well as the poor economy, unstable life and political instability.

Their unhappiness was compounded by a lack of family support, limited political and civil liberties, and often high taxes.

"The people in Southeast Asia have more time to spend with their families in North Asia. The family unit is getting smaller and they have less time to spend with their families," he said.

"There's more time with the family in the home in Southeast Asia," he said.

Singaporeans were the most optimistic about the future, with 15 percent saying "nothing is wrong" and 45 percent saying they believed they would be as happy or even happier in the next five years, the survey company found.

One in four of those in Singapore expressed the hope to "positive thinking" and about 50 percent said they would be as happy or even happier in the next five years, the survey company found.

Troops foil NPA raid on Army station

By Kim Palacios and Carla P. Santos
 Manila Bureau

DUMAGUITE CITY—Government soldiers foiled plans of the New People's Army (NPA) to raid the company headquarters of the 542nd Engineering Construction Battalion in Kalinga-Tarlac, Zamboanga, Negros Oriental, but no armed soldiers said a rebel force killed four soldiers.

The Army command was alerted by the 11th Infantry Division in Zamboanga. The second division took place early morning of June 12 when a group of 100 to 150 NPA troops were dispatched to the area to verify reports of the personnel armed men there.

But Gen. Arifon Soliman, commander general of the 11th Infantry Division, said about 40 NPA soldiers encountered by soldiers were found to have been planning to raid the headquarters of an army engineering unit in the place.

Antonio Domestico died in the ensuing gun battle. He was brought to the hospital of Santa Rosa Hospital in San Carlos City. He will be moved to Cebu, according to Capt. Tito S. Baldo, Infantry, acting provincial police director.

Domestico and Major Florentino Alcantara were killed in the encounter, according to Baldo. The 542nd Battalion was said by the provincial government to have been ordered to guard the area. The 542nd Battalion was said by the provincial government to have been ordered to guard the area.

Give 'tax on text' a chance, Congress urged

By Michele V. Roman and Carlos S. Bontas

THE DEPARTMENT OF Finance is asking lawmakers to give the MessagePad administration a chance to explain the merits of its "tax on text" proposal before they close the books.

Given the lingering risk of winning the popular vote but losing the votes of Congress, the DFP and its supporters are not mulling a further revenue source, which would help narrow budget gaps.

The budget deficit, which means higher expenditures and lower revenues, is expected to reach Phil 1.7 billion this year. The government hopes to gradually reduce it over the next five years, according to its 2004 budget.

"If we are all agreeable to the issue of having a balanced budget by 2005, then everything should be falling in place," said Finance Undersecretary Carlos S. Bontas.

The DFP official said that while the government has in-steady undertaken budget-cutting measures to reduce expenditures, there were not enough to solve the deficit problem. He explained that a cut in spending should be accompanied by higher revenues, and that the savings should be used to fund the education and health sectors.

But while the executive branch is still preparing to lobby for the passage of the "tax on text" in the next Congress, legislators have already looked the proposal. They said imposing a tax on text could only burden consumers.

On June 10, Sen. Ralph Recto, chair of the House and Senate committees, Sen. Manuel Villar, chair of the Senate committee, and Sen. Juan Ponce Enrile, chair of the public services committee, said they were not going to follow the tax on text proposal because it would be a burden on consumers.

But the DFP official said the proposal does not have to burden consumers. He said that the government would not be able to implement the tax on text.

"Technically, the tax on text is not a tax. It is only a fee that will be levied on consumers," he said.

According to a memo sent to the Department of Finance, the tax on text that the government is considering will be levied on consumers and will be used to fund the government's 2004 budget. The memo said that the government would need to allocate 100 million a year to fund the tax on text.

Lending by banks inched up in April

By Derek C. Santos

LENDING by the country's commercial banks rose 0.2% for the second straight month in April from a year ago, as continued optimism about the May presidential election.

The Bangko Sentral ng Pilipinas (BSP) reported that the bank's outstanding loans rose by a modest 0.2 percent to P1.5 trillion as of mid-April 2004 from the same period last year.

The growth in bank lending in April was well below a slight improvement from the 0.1 percent annual increase registered in March and the 1.1 percent contraction in February. "Continued bank loans to the agriculture, industries and business sector posted a modest increase of 0.2 percent in April, which is above the 0.1 percent annual growth registered in the previous month," BSP Governor Raulo B. Romo said in a press release.

The growth in bank lending in the other sectors was also below the sustained rise in the outstanding loans of commercial banks. Loans to the transportation and communication sector grew by 0.3 percent, while

STOCKS jumped 1.34 percent higher yesterday, as bargain hunters pounced on the market's value after a period of volatility. The Philippine Stock Index (PSI) closed at 1,340.14, up from 1,324.14 the day before.

The PSI's rise was driven by a surge in the price of the country's largest companies, which were trading at a discount to their intrinsic value. The PSI's rise was also helped by a surge in the price of the country's largest companies, which were trading at a discount to their intrinsic value.

Give 'tax on text' a chance . . .

By Robert D. Fox

will impose a tax of six cents on each text message. That's far less than 20 cents, and P11.75 follows in 20 cents.

Before Congress has voted the government's plan, it would surely be before the Senate. That had been paying billions in profits to the public.

That would be a new idea. It was one of the top requests in the country after paying a new income of P11.75 billion last year.

That message had made. And that would be profitable as the country's 20 million subscribers sold an average of seven text messages daily, making the Philippines the world's most popular.

"The industry is not in a hurry to pay a tax on text messaging," says a spokesman for the 20 million subscribers, the new law says. "We're not in a hurry to pay a tax on text messaging."

That is, however, the industry's plan. The industry's plan is to pay a tax on text messaging. The industry's plan is to pay a tax on text messaging.

the end of the day, it would be subscribers that would get the bill.

Texting over messaging could generate much revenue especially since the country's 20 million subscribers have roughly 100 million text messages daily.

Outside of the fees not included in the prepaid and postpaid plans, each SMS is charged P1.

That's a lot of money. About 100 million text messages a day from the fact that 15 million subscribers will likely send that as much as 10 million text messages pass through its network of 1.5 million subscribers.

The Philippines is planning to step up its efforts to 20 cents in all around the world on each text message.

A HOSPITAL stay is rarely something to look forward to. But M-Tech Medical Hospital may just change that.

The hospital, aside from providing full service conventional care, has specialties in cancer, pain, clinical psychology and child behavior disorder, and provides services for women and infants, geriatric (seniors) screening, physical and rehabilitative medicine, occupational and industrial medicine, among others. It has a staff of 100 doctors and 70 specialists.

Established three years ago as a diagnostic and therapeutic center, M-Tech (Inc. 0904751-0904754-0904755) got its start as a private hospital last October. Located at 379 San Gil Street in Makati, it has five floors with 100 beds and state-of-the-art facilities.

A branch of Dr. Angeline Reyes, M-Tech says, the hospital aims to elevate the standard of healthcare delivery. "We intend to give a more personalized care rather than one of the milliwire, thus, the patient does

Using a treadmill correctly

CARELESS mistakes like inadequate warm-ups and excessive miles are the heart and soul of a person's cardiovascular exercise program.

But to benefit fully from these machines, you have to use them properly. Unfortunately, many people do not know the proper form. Correct use of these machines will not only prevent injuries but also help you burn more calories.

Treadmills are the most popular cardiovascular machines because they are so easy to use. You don't need a special skill to walk. Though you need to know how to use a treadmill correctly, this machine can accommodate all of shapes sizes as well as men and women use.

WELL AND GOOD

ITSAI DEWIS

People with back pain, knee problems or weak ankles usually find walking on a treadmill shock-absorbing surface kinder to their joints than walking on concrete or asphalt.

The first few times you use a treadmill, you may get a little dizzy when you get off the machine. This is normal since your body isn't used

Treadmills have great potential for injury because, at high speed, they can throw you off to walking on a moving sidewalk. But you will get used to it. Hold on to something while you get your first steps.

In the beginning, it is okay to hold on to the
